Allconnex Water makes its mark with school students

Allconnex Water has launched its Watersaver Education Program with a school tour today at its Pimpama Coomera Wastewater Treatment Plant.

Year 7 pupils from Guardian Angels Primary School, Ashmore, toured the plant to see the process of wastewater recycling and treatment.

The free Watersaver Education Program is designed to promote a sustainable water future by engaging students in an awareness campaign highlighting the value of water both locally and globally.

Allconnex Water CEO Kim Wood said the students learnt the importance of wastewater recycling and the treatment process.

“Our Watersaver Education Program will enhance their knowledge and awareness about water, water saving and how it plays an important role in their daily lives, said Mr Wood.

“Guardian Angels is the first of many schools from the Gold Coast, Logan and Redland areas that will benefit from the program and participate in future tours of our facilities.”

Guardian Angels Assistant Principal Administrations, John Cameron, said the treatment plant tour was a valuable addition to the school’s curriculum.

“The student’s interest in water management and conservation at the school is why we enquired about the tour and registered with Allconnex for educational materials too,” said Mr Cameron.

The “Make your Water Mark” school Watersaver Education Program has been developed by leading educators for school teachers through in-depth focus group discussions and research.

The education program is available for every year level (early childhood through to secondary school) on the Allconnex Water website.

Schools can register at www.allconnex.com.au to access a range of curriculum material with lesson plans, activity sheets and additional information to support teachers in their delivery of water education to primary and secondary students.
